From The Trump Bump To The Trump Dump... And Now No Biden Stump After the first debate between President Joe Biden and former President Donald Trump, the equity market began to price in a win for Trump. This trade got a bump after the assassination attempt on Trump as the betting odds on his win rose sharply.

But at the Republican National Convention (RNC) last week, Trump made remarks about Taiwan that cascaded into a sharp sell-off of semiconductor stocks. The move hit the large cap Technology stocks, particularly the Magnificent 7. The market averages also fell, with the Nasdaq 100 down sharply. As we wrote last week, a correction was expected with sentiment very bullish and markets very overbought.

What an unprecedented Presidential election! Not since 1968, when Lyndon B. Johnson announced he would not run for reelection, has a sitting President stepped aside. With President Biden announcing yesterday that he will no longer seek reelection (and is endorsing VP Kamala Harris instead), news will stay focused on who will become the Democratic nominee. So far, markets are pricing in a Trump win even against Harris. So, we don't expect this announcement to have a material impact on markets. We will say it again: it's a long time until November.

Here Comes The Bucking Bull Again

In our Year Ahead Outlook 2024 report, we said this would be the year of the Bucking Bull for bonds and stocks. Bonds have indeed bucked, but we think rates are falling, so the Bull should run for fixed income into the fall months. Equities had minor bucks in January, April and May/June and now we have another one. Markets tend to peak in the summer and correct in the fall. But corrections can be a process. The sharp sell-off last week has the Nasdaq 100 almost oversold. We believe markets will bottom out over the coming weeks and attempt another rally into August. If a new high is not made, it would signal a market peak with a correction to follow in the fall. We are not sellers at this time – but if your portfolio has not been rebalanced, it may be time to do so, especially as the market rallies.

Who will win the 2024 US presidential election?

Small Caps Not Ready To Take Leadership

The Russell 2000 small cap stocks had a sharp rally over the past week as fast money traders [hedge funds, Commodity Trading Advisors (CTAs), etc.] were forced to unwind a long Nasdaq 100 (QQQ) trade with a short (hedge) of Russell 2000. So, is this just short-covering or something more? Looking at the weekly chart of the Russell 2000, we see an attempt at a breakout, but there is a lot of resistance to fight through. Also, price momentum from the 14-week stochastic is weakening, not strengthening. More importantly, the percentage of non-earning companies in the Russell 2000 stands at nearly 44%, according to Strategas. Remember: the true driver of stock prices is earnings growth. In our view, what we saw with small caps is just a temporary move; large caps, particularly Mega Caps, will resume leadership.

Heavy Week Of Economic Data But Core PCE Takes Center Stage

This week the news will stay focused on who will become the Democratic Presidential nominee, but the markets will trade instead on the onslaught of economic data.

With polling sites still pricing in a Trump win, economic data will drive markets this week – and we'll get a boatload of data – from housing to durable goods to consumer spending. We also get 2Q GDP which will determine how the overall economy is doing. But the most important data point will be Core Personal Consumption Expenditure (PCE) released on Friday. The market will be awaiting this data to determine whether the Federal Reserve will indeed begin cutting interest rates. The upcoming FOMC meeting on July 30-31 is not expected to result in any changes. In fact, investors are nearly 100% certain that the Fed will announce a 25 basis point interest rate cut in September.
